Dear David,

As an agricultural journalist for more than three decades, I have covered the U.S. beef cattle business during a time that U.S. beef producers have evolved from anonymous commodity suppliers to integral components of a sophisticated supply chain. Today's beef producer must fulfill consumers' demands for transparent information on production processes to stay in business.

Your innovation that unifies data is imperative to these modern beef producers' efforts as they seek to manage new requisites including individual animal ID, Quality Systems Assessment and cattle supplies from known origin with full information on backgrounding and feed supplies.

I also spent 16 years as a vice president of the Texas Beef Council in charge of communications, international marketing, human nutrition and beef quality. I know that the industry needs solutions like yours to keep consumers coming back to the supermarket to support sales of value-added beef products.

Good luck with your endeavor. I'd like to offer what support I can to your continued success in advancing this important research.

Sincerely,

Doug Perkins
